A College summit on initiatives in police constable education, leadership and career progression

News   2 mins read

We are holding an event to share the work being done to improve police constable entry routes and develop leadership across the service. The summit takes place this week at our Ryton site.

Leaders from across policing and higher education, including our CEO Andy Marsh, will discuss key leadership priorities, driving change and setting standards. There will be a focus on how we are continuing to work with partners to further improve police constable entry routes and maximise their potential, as well as sessions on promotion and career progression.

A range of resources, programmes and processes have been created to support colleagues across policing with this work.

These include:

- the optimisation of all police constable entry routes
- the introduction of the new police constable entry programme
- the launch of the National College of Police Leadership and associated programmes
- the national talent development strategy
- reforms to sergeant and inspector promotion processes

Resources for delegates include:

- Our leadership standards
- Our police leadership programme
- Police constable entry routes
- Career development guiding principles
- National police promotion framework
- The police constable entry route documentation at College Learn (you will need to log in)

- The police constable entry programme (PCEP) questions and answers part 2 at College Learn (you will need to log in)
- The police constable research project summary document at Knowledge Hub (you will need to log in)
- The police uplift hub information on attracting, recruiting and retaining a diverse and effective workforce (you will need to log in)
- The leadership learning platform (you will need to log in)
