

Vulnerability, policing and administrative fairness

Exploring the increasingly complex nexus between law, vulnerability and policing – particularly the positive obligations arising from law for safeguarding vulnerable people.

Key details

| | |
|--------------------------------------|--|
| Lead institution | University of York |
| Principal researcher(s) | Prof Joe Tomlinson, Dr Jed Meers and Angela Paul angela.paul@york.ac.uk |
| Police region | North East |
| Collaboration and partnership | <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Dr Richard Martin (London School of Economics (LSE))• Dr Elizabeth Cook (City, University of London)• Dr Ruth Weir (City, University of London)• Professor Simon Halliday (University of Strathclyde) |
| Level of research | Professional/work based |
| Project start date | September 2023 |
| Date due for completion | July 2024 |

Research context

Four questions are at the centre of the research.

1. How, if at all, does 'legal vulnerability' derived from human rights law find everyday form in the orientations, communications and prioritisations within the police, and how are positive obligations understood and enacted in practice by officers?
2. How, in the policies and actions of the police and other state agencies, is 'legal vulnerability' derived from human rights law related to other legal conceptions of vulnerability found in, for example, housing or social work law?

3. How are various forms of state power, once legally channelled towards these groups by legal obligations, perceived procedurally and substantively by the 'legally vulnerable'?
4. In what ways do legal duties towards the vulnerable – both in substance and through processes of implementation – help to safeguard and alleviate vulnerability?

Research methodology

The project is designed to create the foundation for a major mixed-methods, interdisciplinary empirical project that will generate data and produce evidence-led reform initiatives where appropriate.

The project methodology consists of a literature-based legal and theoretical approach which will be combined with empirical findings from research with the police.

Tags

- Vulnerable people