

New credit estimator available

Published on 10 February 2026

A new resource to help you understand the academic value of your College of Policing training

News 2 mins read

A new credit estimator is now available to help police officers and staff understand the academic worth of College of Policing programmes they have completed.

What the credit estimator does

The credit estimator shows the educational level and credit value of College programmes, making it easier to provide evidence and explain your learning to universities, awarding organisations and employers.

It's particularly useful if you have not undertaken an educationally accredited programme and want to demonstrate the value of your College learning when seeking formal recognition or applying for further study.

How it can help you

The credit estimator supports you to:

- provide evidence for recognition of prior learning \(RPL\) discussions with universities and awarding organisations
- make informed decisions about future training and qualifications
- seek formal accreditation for your College learning
- support applications for promotion or new roles

Use the credit estimator to find the programmes you have completed and see the educational level and credit value of your learning. It currently covers a selection of programmes, with more being added as the levelling and credit process continues.

Go to the credit estimator

Help us improve

We would like to hear your thoughts on how we can improve this resource. Email curriculumenquiries@college.police.uk with any feedback on:

- programmes you would like added
- whether the information meets your needs
- how the pages are presented

Tags

CPD